Becky Quick, Host: I know another CEO who you've met with here in Omaha is Mary Barra, that you bought a new Cadillac. She was instrumental, I think, in convincing you to buy that Cadillac. We had some questions that came in from Kyle Bass. Kyle Bass is an investor in General Motors. He's been pushing for the company to buy back more shares and increase the dividend.

Warren Buffett, American Businessman and Investor: And put a fellow on the board.

Becky Quick, Host: And put a fellow on the board. That is Harry Wilson is one of the people that he's been pushing for that. Harry Wilson was involved in GM with the resetting of GM and was involved in that process. But he points out that he thinks that it's trading at a significant discount to intrinsic value. Would you be in favor of them buying some stock?

Warren Buffett, American Businessman and Investor: That's not a big deal with me. I mean Mary's only been in there a very short period of time. There's a lot of things to do. Having had to go to the government to stay alive a few years ago, the auto business you can go through a lot of cash very fast and they're also building their finance unit back up. If I were running it, would I be buying their stock? I don't know whether I would or not but it doesn't bother me at all that she's not doing it. I think that she's exactly the right person for the job. I've met her a couple times and she is very, very good and I just think the idea of trying to do something now that gets a little pop in the stock should not be on her agenda or the shareholders' agenda. I think that the main thing to do is to build the strengths of General Motors which they had in the past and I think Mary is the right one to do it and I totally disagree with the idea of putting somebody on the board who has an option on some other people's stock which is only good for two years. To have somebody sitting there in the board room who has a two-year horizon when they make money it goes to zero after that. It's just not the way to run a business. Berkshire would not be where it is today if we'd had a bunch of directors over the years that had two-year time horizons on when they could make money off of the stock.

Becky Quick, Host: What do you think about corporate activism in general? Activist investors.

Warren Buffett, American Businessman and Investor: Well, I think sometimes it's justified and sometimes it's just way, way off the mark. I mean I think that Coca-Cola when David Winters who runs a fund that has underperformed by every measure from inception—five years, one year—and who draws a hundred and fifty basis point fee when you can go to Vanguard and do it for seventeen basis points and he complains about compensation not being commensurate with performance at Coke and then he has that kind of record himself, I think that he's a fellow living in an all-glass house.

Becky Quick, Host: There are still some questions that are coming in, Warren. In fact, David Tepper wrote in a little bit ago and he has a couple of questions for you. Obviously, David Tepper the hedge fund manager. He says, 'First of all, what does Buffett think about transparency of compensation plans, particularly in regard to how companies make capital allocation decisions?' and then he wrote me another e-mail that says, 'How does capital allocation relate to how much cash is on the balance sheet?'

Warren Buffett, American Businessman and Investor: That's a pretty broad question. Transparency of compensation relative to capital allocation—the compensation figures that we publish are the ones that are required by the SEC and I think it's a terrible mistake, just like in your business—I mean if everybody knew how much each anchor got paid, believe me it would tend to escalate payments. Is that good for the shareholders or not? So, I think publishing everybody's earnings would be anti-shareholder in the end. It would satisfy a lot of curiosity and a lot of people would get very envious of those around them and I saw at Salomon when I ran it how envious people could get of others' compensation. But I don't see how it relates to capital allocation exactly. I don't get that part of the question.

Becky Quick, Host: Alright, maybe David will write in if he's got any additional thoughts on that. In the meantime, I also want to tell you Harry Wilson wrote in. We were talking about GM earlier. Harry Wilson has been proposed by a group of activist investors as a potential addition to the board of General Motors. We had some comments about it. He wrote in just to clarify some things and I do want to give him his say. It's a long letter, I won't read it all but he does say that the underlying rationale of his candidacy is to do exactly what you said—to help General Motors build for the long term strengths it needs to become a world class company and thrive for many years to come. He points out he's been a shareholder since 2011 and as he said, he expects to be a shareholder for many years to come. As he said to the company, he's perfectly willing to 'take all of my compensation in stock and have it locked up for an extended period of time. This is not by any means a two-year deal.'

Warren Buffett, American Businessman and Investor: Yeah. Well, maybe I'm wrong but my understanding was he was getting the profit on four percent of roughly thirty million shares owned by three hedge funds so that's a one-point-two million share position. Where the money that was made in the next two years counted and nothing afterwards, so I don't know the size of these other positions compared to that million-two or whatever it may be that he has an option on. I don't think it's wise to compensate any director based on what happens in the next two years and have them overwhelmingly focused on that which may or may not be the case. If Harry has a ton of stock himself that he's going to put away for a long period of time, that's one thing.

Becky Quick, Host: I don't know the answer on that either but he does also write in right now and say that he does agree with you on Mary Barra, that he supports her as well. He's a big supporter of her and thinks she's doing a great job.

Warren Buffett, American Businessman and Investor: I think he's dead right. I think he's dead right. It's not easy running General Motors and walking in now, in the last year, a whole lot of things on her plate. I mean it's a worldwide organization and I believe in giving somebody like that a lot of slack. We do it with our own managers.

Becky Quick, Host: I'll also point out—the emails are coming in fast and furious—David Faber just writing in saying you are exactly right. Four percent of thirty-one million shares at two in three years is what he's talking about with that.

David Faber, Host: Thanks very much, Mary. We're going to get back to Warren Buffett and some comments he made to Becky Quick involving something that I had reported on previously, of course. It's an issue that I think is an interesting one. Perhaps it's not gotten as much focus because I do wonder whether it will become something we see more of in potential activist situations that is namely a compensation structure for a nominee director that is different from the board of directors at the rest of the company but perhaps will be a way to actually nominate—and this is an argument that certainly will be made by those who are doing the nominating—directors who otherwise would not entertain taking a place on a public company board given all of the strictures associated with said board seat, not to mention the difficulty. And somebody who is of a talent level perhaps where they would focus a lot of their attention on that company and therefore deserve perhaps to become compensated at a high level. I refer here to GM which, interestingly as I said, was something that Becky asked Mr. Buffett about. Now it's something I reported on previously which is a group of hedge funds that control—I think its thirty-one million shares that have Harry Wilson out front. The gentleman who of course, a restructuring expert who was also part of the team advising GM treasury sometime back who has been a long time shareholder in GM but would stand of course to either earn two percent or four percent depending on whether he actually is on the board of the appreciation in the shares owned by those hedge funds whom he would be their nominee. Now it's unclear whether a proxy fight is really going to follow here and in fact it would seem that the structure of the agreement which he has to get permission to go beyond a million dollars to spend for a proxy fight which costs as much as twenty million given how much mailings cost. But that being said they may allow that to occur, they may continue to go ahead and its funny when I talk to some hedge funds, they are very much in favor of the idea of this whereas some institutions give it pause. Here's what Mr. Buffett had to say.

Warren Buffett, American Businessman and Investor: I totally disagree with the idea of putting somebody on the board who has an option on some other peoples' stock which is only good for two years. To have somebody sitting there in the board room who has a two-year horizon when they make money it goes to zero after that. It's just not the way to run a business. Berkshire would not be where it is today if we'd had a bunch of directors over the years that had two-year time horizons on when they could make money off of the stock.

David Faber, Host: Of course, many shareholders actually have less than two-year time horizons including large institutions as well. In this case, Mr. Wilson by the way, I have not had an opportunity to speak to him but he did respond to Becky and to me as well saying the whole underlying rationale of his candidacy is to do exactly what Mr. Buffett just said, to help General Motors build long-term strength. He points out of course the fact that he was involved in the restructuring in 2009 that gave GM a new lease on life. He says he's been a shareholder since 2011 and he's also gone on to say that he's willing to take all of his compensation in stock and have it locked up for an extended period of time. I need to explore that a bit more in terms of what that means beyond obviously the two and three year provisions that would be a part of an arrangement were he elected to the board of directors with these shareholders. But I focused on this Jim because I think it's interesting as an issue.

Jim Cramer, Correspondent: Oh definitely.

David Faber, Host: The incentive fee structure. We've seen it very rarely in terms of these activist fights. It does apply. Dow has a couple with Loeb. Hess removed it, Elliot removed from their directors when they won board seats at Hess but I do wonder whether it's going to come around again because those in favor tell me, listen—we want the best qualified person. You try and get somebody for whatever a board is going to pay him who we think would be a great director to actually take that on.

Jim Cramer, Correspondent: Nelson Peltz—not of this ilk whatsoever. Tries to get the best people on. Nominated some great people, had some great people, and wants to be totally aligned with the board. Not necessarily aligned with Peltz although there is obviously great synergy when you have a Heinz CEO added to PepsiCo, he can be very, very helpful to Indra Nooyi which is the case with PepsiCo but that's the opposite of General Motors, I think.

David Faber, Host: Yeah. And Buffett of course also very much getting behind Mary Barra as CEO.
